

The YIP “Your Inner Power” Protocol

Through the Red 2 Blue methodology by Gazing

When the skill breaks, do not force it. Move from Red to Blue and rebuild the map.

Mindset for the Moment

If you have ever stood over a putt and felt like your hands were no longer yours, you know how rough this can be. One day the move is there. The next day it feels stuck. Tight. Weird.

That does not mean you have lost the skill. It usually means too much is happening at once. Part of you wants to trust the move. Another part wants to grab the wheel and steer it. It is a bit like having two people tugging at the same shopping trolley. It will not roll straight.

That is where Red 2 Blue helps. Red is the rushed, jumpy state. Blue is the calm, steady one. Gazing is the little bridge between them. When your eyes settle on one small spot outside your body, the noise drops. Not all at once, maybe. But enough for the motion to breathe again.

Use this when putting, chipping, pitching, or any pressure shot starts to feel jerky, guided, or shaky. The aim is simple. Quiet the noise so one clean move can show up again.

Key Principles

Notice Red Early

The moment you feel tight, twitchy, or over-busy in your head, name it. That is Red. You do not need to panic. You just need to stop feeding it.

Let Your Eyes Lead

Pick one small spot outside your body and stay with it. A blade of grass. A start line. A landing mark. Your eyes are like the front wheel on a bike. When they settle, the rest of you has a better chance of following.

Keep One Clear Move

Do not mix five fixes at once. That is when the motion gets muddy. Give yourself one setup, one gaze, one cue, and one honest go.

Red 2 Blue Reset Playbook

Run these steps in order when the skill feels off. Keep it plain. Keep it personal. And if one part helps more than another, notice that too.

1. Change the Setup

- Action: Make one small change so your body does not fall back into the same stuck pattern. Change the grip. Soften your hands. Move the ball a touch. Narrow your stance. In putting, this might be cross-handed, claw, or just a slightly different handle feel.
- Scoring: Give your fresh setup a score from 0 to 100 for how much it feels like a real reset.
- Coach's Tip: Do not search for perfect. You are just opening a new door.

2. Gaze at One Spot

- Action: Set your eyes on one exact point outside your body. Keep it small and clear. A blade of grass. A start line. A landing spot. Let that spot pull your attention away from your hands and into the task.
- Timing: Give yourself a couple of calm seconds on that spot before you move.
- Scoring: Score your focus from 0 to 100. Did your eyes stay quiet and steady, or did they keep wandering back to the move?
- Coach's Tip: If you start checking your hands or stroke again, no drama. Just reset your eyes and start over.

3. Use One Simple Cue

- Action: Pick one short word that fits the shot. It could be "roll", "soft", "through", "land", or "smooth". Say it once, quietly. That is enough.
- Scoring: Score the cue from 0 to 100 for how clean and helpful it felt.
- Coach's Tip: If the cue turns into a sentence, it is too much.

4. Let the Motion Go

- Action: Once you start, let it happen. Do not save it halfway through. Do not grab at it. Trust the setup, the gaze, and the cue, then let the putt or shot run its course.
- Timing: From start to finish, keep it as one clean flow.
- Scoring: Score your trust level from 0 to 100 during the motion.
- Coach's Tip: You can tidy things up after the rep. Not in the middle of it.

5. Stay With It for a Few Reps

- Action: Keep the same setup, the same gaze, and the same cue for a short block of reps. This matters. If you keep changing things after every miss, it is like replanting a seed every five minutes and then wondering why nothing grows.
- Timing: Stay with one pattern for 5 to 10 reps before you change anything.
- Scoring: Score the set from 0 to 100 for how repeatable and calm it felt.
- Coach's Tip: You are not chasing relief. You are building trust.

What This Helps With

- It helps you stop trying to fix the shot while you are in the shot.
- It helps the motion feel smoother and less grabbed at.
- It helps you bring a bit more calm into pressure moments.
- It helps your eyes stay outside the body instead of diving back into mechanics.
- Most of all, it helps you trust one pattern long enough for it to settle in.

When to Use It

Use this playbook when a skill suddenly goes off, when a change in technique has left you half-old and half-new, or when pressure makes the motion feel tight. It is especially useful for putting yips, nervous chipping, touch shots, and those strange days when nothing feels natural.

Why This Reset Matters

When a skill breaks, most people try harder. That is understandable. It is also usually the trap. The more you wrestle with the move, the more tense it gets.

This reset gives you a calmer way back. You make one small change. You settle your eyes. You use one simple cue. Then you let the motion go. Bit by bit, Blue starts to feel normal again.

You are not trying to bully the old pattern into behaving. You are giving yourself a cleaner road to travel on.

Keep it simple. Keep it clear. Keep moving Blue.
